An Alexandria Station (Ky.) telegram soys: The arrest here yesterday of George W. Williams and James H. Clark by United States officers on the charge of dealing in and manufacturing counterfeit silver dellars, which have in their composition alarge percentage of silver, has awakened a discussion as to whether or not the "Swift" dollar, which passes current in this State and is made of pure silver, is not a counterfeit. The bogus money manufactured by Williams and Clark was skilfully although rudely made, and readily passed current, as the percentage of silver in its composition made it almost impossible to detect its basences by ordinary tests.

As far back as the days of Daniel Boone and Simon Kenton it was known that somewhere in mountain Kentucky there was a large and rich mine of silver. The Indians knew of the existence of this mine and converted the core into cramments for their person, even casting it into bullets, which were fired with deadly aim at the hardy pioneers on the "dark and bloody ground," Shortly after the settlement of Kenton's Station, on Limestone creek, above Moyaville, two adventurous men, named Castleman and Swift, penctrated to the remote mountain region, that acts as a water-shed to the Kentucky, Lisking, Little Sandy, and Big Sandy rivers, and for several years lived on amisble terms with the Indians, who at that time held undisputed domain over the forests and mountains. Swift was something of a doctor, and he had a family in Old Virginia. Castleman was also a married man, and his descendants are to be found at this day in Kentucky—ene of honor and probability—one of whom, General John B. RICHMOND TOBACCO MARKET. SEPTEMBER 17, 1889. At auction, uineteen packages offered; five taken in. Frices, $1.60 to $20; average, $5.66. Frivate sales light, including twenty-two packarcs of varpoers, eight packages of fillers, two puckages of darks, two packages of scraps, and one package of liuriey. The market is restful and without any leading feature, with fine weather in favor of the bearish element.

It may be safely said that our leading and wealthiest tobacconists are more interested in cestern tobacco than Virginia tobacco.

Among these discontinuing work here is Mr.
G. N. Thompson, now of Kentucky.
The bright croe of this year promises a revival of the stripping basiness.
A material need of Richmond is co-operative A material need of Richmond is co-operative tobacco-factories. In snuff and amoking there is a flue opening. Consume home products, bountifully and well supplied, and money will be made here that goes elsewhere. We need to awaken interest outside of our immediate but. awaken interest outside of our immediate busi-ness. There are men of means outside of to-bacco who could be interested in tobacco, and by inrged. The small factory, with odds and ends of machinery and cramped capital, is a thing of the past. It takes money and brains and experience and enterprise to boom tobacco, and these are all here, but the combination is a second combination is a second combination in the second combination in the second combination is a second combination in the second combination in the second combination in the second combination is a second combination in the second combina
